

Insurance: an industry with endless opportunities

Gone are the days when a career in insurance meant that you had to be great at math or sales. With the development of new technologies and the introduction of new types of risks, a variety of unique career options—ranging from human resources to business analysis to marketing—are available within the industry.

Insurance Industry Jobs

Jobs within the insurance industry can be split into two main categories—insurance-specific jobs and multi-industry jobs.

Insurance-specific jobs are positions that are only available within the insurance industry. Some examples of insurance-specific jobs include the following:

Underwriters

Responsible for determining which types of risks are worth insuring.

Claims Adjusters

Determine how much is owed to an insured customer after they've filed a claim.

Actuaries

Calculate the possibility that damaging events will occur in the future.

did you know?

 2.8 million people

Did you know that over two million people work in the United States insurance industry? It's true! Accordingly to the Insurance Information Institute, the industry is responsible for employing over 2.8 million people.

Multi-industry jobs are positions that can be found outside of the insurance industry, but are also necessary in insurance companies.

Examples of multi-industry jobs include:

Administration
